

A transformer is used to transform the voltage of electricity when it leaves a power station for transmission in the National Grid.