

Light bends away from the normal when going from glass or water into air.